

Two Infants Found Who Were Apparently Starved to Death.

without a very flagrant neglect of duty. "I would have arrested her if I had no further evidence than that which my eye gave me this morning," Mr. Dunbar went on to say. "I would have arrested her if no other circumstances are taken into consideration. My own eyes are taken into consideration, and the woman's guilt is doubly strong."

When the body of a woman was taken to the Morgue from a rooming house, and the child had been under the care of the woman, the police officers, James E. Harris, the body was dreadfully thin most conspicuously so; and I thought at the time that the child was starved, which the doctor suggested.

Mrs. Suffer stated that the child had been left in her charge by a woman who had been married to her husband and had never been married. There was no proof against her, and therefore no charge was made against her. There were three children die on her hands within three weeks is rather crowding the mourners, DIED.

OY.—On Sunday, February 19, at his residence, a woman seventy-eight years of age.
February, January 25, at 10 o'clock, to Cal-ummary. Friends are invited to attend.

This is a vertical, high-contrast, black and white image. It appears to be a scan of a textured surface, possibly a book cover or endpaper. The left side is a light gray, textured area. The right side is a dark, irregular shape, possibly a shadow or a piece of tape. There are some small, dark spots and a faint, dark line running vertically down the center. At the bottom left, there is some faint, dark text that is mostly illegible but appears to be "471172".

side Capt. Newton. No boats were allowed to leave alongside. Being informed of the danger and warned of, one Yankee skipper, however, Capt. John Graham of an American schooner, was prompt to risk his life and share the fate of his countrymen. This brave man climbed overboard, and, with a few others, and through the cabin ports started the burning foe.

ABANDONING THE SHIP.

When it became doubtful as to saving the ship, the crew were ordered to abandon it, and his effects, together with the ship's stores and treasure, aboard. A battle of more than an hour' duration followed, during which the ship was again and again fired against the fire. Admiral Sartorius earned, and repeatedly entrusted Newton to abandon the ship, and to save the lives of the crew. He no longer endangered the lives of the crew. He was no longer unavailing and he left the doomed ship, and, with his officers, reluctantly gave the order to abandon the ship. Many of the exhausted men plunged overboard, and the gun-ports were picked up by the sea.

clothing and were distributed among the many vessels lying at anchor in the harbor. All were invited on board the Minibar, a line of support ships of the fleet, the command of which was held by the American Ambassador, Capt. Newton and most of the officers got on shore and quarters were provided for them by our Consul. These were the first of the many courtesies which we received, warm, cordial hospitality and every kind of attention. The next morning some of our officers went on shore in the uniform of the English army and were met by the British Admiral of the Admiralty causing much merriment as they received and acknowledged the salutes. The next day the high insignia of rank, from the country of our guests, were received and the many courteous attentions so delicately conferred upon us by the

The American ship Rajah was challenged by the Albatross and Albatross, and Albatross was sent on board and sailed for home after a detention of only forty-eight hours. The remainder were assigned to the barque Porpoise, which was ordered to remain near the scene of the wreck to protect the property could be secured. Submarine divers were employed, who succeeded in raising the engines and the valuable copper boilers, which were sent home, and the wreck was destroyed so as not to endanger navigation.

After a few days' detention Mr. Cushing left in one of the Oriental Line of steamships for Alexandria. As he passed out of the harbor all the naval ships manned their yards and fired salutes in honor of the American Minister.

A DIAMOND KING.

B. I. Barnato and the Fortune He Has Made in the South African Mines.

From the Jeweler's Weekly.

B. I. Barnato, one of the wealthiest diamond miners in the world, is a candidate for Parliament from Kimberley and is making a bitter personal fight for the office. At a recent public meeting, in denying some statements made against him by the opposing party, Mr. Barnato related the history of his career in the country.

He recalled how a page from the "Arabian Nights." He said that he came to the colonies in 1879, and in 1876 he bought the first claim in Kimberley, paying good price for it. In 1880 he owned four claims, which were loaded into a company for £20,000 a claim, making him the owner of the largest mine in the world, with the machinery an aggregate value of £100,000. He said that at present he put himself at a good stage, and tion, and he succeeded. This was called the Burnside Co. In 1854 he bought the Ward and Payson mines, which were given in Kimberly. Yes, with that speculation alone he made $30,000. After the company passed out of his control, although the Ward mine was sold for $100,000, he received a dividend of 9 per cent within three months and did so at the expiration of each following quarter, until the claims at the end of nine months were sold for $100,000.

In the course of time the ground beneath covered with reef and a heavy mining debt was saddled upon the corporation. Mr. Burnside was not a man to be easily discouraged, although, as he naively admitted, "I had put the property up at auction I could have bought it in at an enormous profit. Standing their claim, valued at $5,000 each, were at $35, and I am convinced that I could have bought in the Barnato block with great advantage. I am now in a position to be amalgamated with the Standard Mining Co. and bought the shares that originally cost $200, after four years' work, up to first cost, and I am sure that my wealth can be amassed in the diamond fields. Now let me, in concluding, repeat Mr. Barnato's own words regarding his present fortune. In the year 1890, he had a net worth of $100,000; his colony are $2,000,000. Of this Kimberley exports one-half. Now my opponents say that I am not a fair representative of the colony. I am not a Parliament, but let me tell you I represent half the exports of this colony. The diamond industry of this colony is a gov-

You can estimate from Mr. Barnato's holdings that his income must be. It is only a question of time and of the continuance of the demand for Kimberley and Beasdale. The diamond king will eclipse in wealth the Indian Maharajah and the railroad monarch of America.

A Measure of Economy.

From the Pittsburgh Dispatch.

"It is a shrewd business, this buying of presents for everybody under the sun," said a man to his wife yesterday.

"Yes, my dear," she quietly replied, "but I don't see any way to avoid it, do you?"

"Well, I was talking to Dr. Herber to-day, and he thought that your health demanded—"

"My health, Charles? Why, I never was better in my life!"

"I've said," she began when you interrupted me, that Dr. Herber said that your health demanded that you should have a change of air at once, and he advised me to take you to Sweden. Call that without delay. How soon can you start?"

"I've got all those presents to select—"
